SPENDS LAST WEEK IN HOME COUNTY

Stuart Admirer Predicts He Will Be Next Governor of Virginia.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]

Cleveland, Va., November 3.—Henry C. Stuart, the Democratic candidate for Congress in the district who is spending the last week of the campaign in his home county, spoke here last night to a large audience. He was introduced by E. B. Wilson, of Lebanon, ex-Commonwealth's Attorney of the county, who is accompanying Mr. Stuart on his tour of the county, and who, in a speech of half an hour, paid a high tribute to the sterling character, public and private, of the Democratic standard-bearer, and declared that he would not only be elected to Congress on November 8, but that he would be the next Governor of Virginia, as sure as he lived until the time came for the election. Mr. Stuart was accorded an ovation when he was presented to the large audience, which gave him the closest attention during the speech of more than two hours in length. He spoke feelingly, as he referred to the fact that many of his hearers had been his neighbors, and his warm friends of a lifetime, saying that he was proud to be in the midst of those, the smoke of whose chimneys could be seen from his front door. His speech made a strong impression, and determination to support the Democratic ticket in this county was expressed after the meeting that they were going to vote for him. He is having large crowds at every point where he appears, even in the rural communities, and the people of his home county are rallying to his support with an enthusiasm and determination in highest contrast to the apathy of this county. The speakers left on the noon train for Castletown, where they spoke to-day and from there they spoke to-night. This county will give Mr. Stuart a good majority on next Tuesday.
